

RE, Review of the BBC Royal Charter

G BREEN-TURNER

16th MARCH 04

Dear Sirs,

In Response: -

I value the Independance of the BBC.

The BBC's contribution should be consistent, independant and quality of its Broadcasting.

The BBC should not make any big changes, if any, over the next 10 yrs, only to its quality.

The licence fee is the best and only way an independant
BBC can be funded.

I believe there are too many channels on BBC and a dumbing down of programs is happening.

I do not believe your online services fit into public Service broadcasting and should be paid for by those who want access to them.

The BBC World Services should remain funded as is.

The Governors should be more independant of the management.

The Royal Charter should remain.

2

The BBC should be producing more Diverse and better Quality Programs.

The BBC should set the Standard for T.V. Programs.

Improve local coverage rather than create more channels.

Change in the BBC should be slow as regards to new technologies and listening habits. (as these change so quickly).

My main requirements of the BBC, are to remain independant, have quality programs, set higher standards of broadcasting, not to compete with commercial channels, not to follow commercial channels.

Independance, quality and Diversity

Yours sincerely

* Why is your consultation Document "Reviews of the BBC's Royal Charter" not available in all libraries.