

From: Derick Brock
Sent: 16 December 2003 13:10
To: BBC Charter Review
Subject: Reponse tp Public Consultation.

Dear Sir,

In simple terms, I used to watch nothing but the BBC TV programs. But now I find I'm more included to one or other of the alternative providers. In particular their documentaries, although even they on occasions tend to be more about presentation than content. Not forgetting the infuriating adverts of course. Nonetheless, I find I'm now drawn to these evermore frequently (programs not adverts). Indeed, some of your offerings I find completely unwatchable. All the shouting, visual exclamations and general over excitement, mor5e in keeping with a kindergarten out of control. No decorum.

As for financing, the current system is undoubtedly the best. The other systems all not only require those infuriating adverts but also one must remember that the cost comes through the services and items we purchase. One doesn't even need a TV receiver to pay for the other lot!! Further, the cost of the adverts has to be provided also!! Some of which I wouldn't be surprise to lean costing more that the programs! All of which undoubtedly comes out of everyone's pocket.

In summary:

Keep the financing arrangement, but improve if not return to the better quality of programming of yesteryear.

Yours faithfully

Derick Brock