Ladies & Gentlemen,

I hope you will be able to get some notice taken by Prouucers on the BBC and all other TV companies.

Ten years ago I wrote to the BBC and ITV pointing out that music played during many programmes was much louder than the speech was spoiling otherwise well produced programmes, I was told that it was not.

Over the past three years the volume of music which is not needed or have anything to do with what viewers are trying to watch is far worse viewers have to keep reducing the volume while the music is being played between shots when the players in the story start talking again some of it gets lost while you are turning the volume up again.

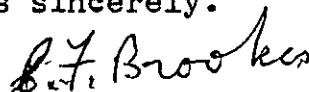

This now seems to happen on 90% of programmes.

If people want to listen to loud music they can use their radios or a CD, it is not needed on Television programmes.

Please get something done to get rid of this problem, every person I have spoken to about this has told me that it annoys them as it does me.

Thank you for your trouble.

Yours sincerely.

C.F. Brookes. Mr.
