

Sent: 15 December 2003 14:58
To: BBC Charter Review
Subject: Charter Review

We are octogenarians who look at the News,
Songs of Praise, Antiques Roadshow, and programmes like Lawrence of Arabia.

We have been much bothered by tiresome letters about License Fee for a holiday cottage which does not have TV. We tell them, we tell them, we tell them, but still money is wasted sending out these letters. If there could be a less aggravating method of check up, we would support it. Perhaps the license should be displayed on a window, as in the case of motor vehicles.

I even been asked if a small business run from home had its separate TV license. How many people watch TV and run a business at the same time, in the living room?

Elizabeth Cosgrove.