Dear Sir/Madam

I have just been informed of your invitation to the British public to express its views on current and future BBC services and so have no official form to submit.

However, I must tell you that my favourite Television programme is the weather forecast, except you do not allow the poor presenter sufficient time to speak. As for the rest of TV programmes, I carefully select those that are not going to be an incitement to vice or voyeurism (the previews are very helpful on this) or made offensive by bad language.

What remains is often not very much, which I think is sad. The BBC should be a power for good to improve public behaviour and taste, and it should show itself to be fair to all opinions in interviews and discussions and documentaries.

Yours sincerely,

A Ellis
