

Dear Sir/Madam

10.03.04

I value the opportunity to contribute to the Charter review public consultation. As a family we appreciate most of the documentary programmes and have always had regard for the status of the BBC as a service to the public. We are most disturbed that such a respected media has over the years seriously deteriorated in the moral tone and level of entertainment programmes, shows, films and adverts. The gratuitous sex, obscenities, violence and blasphemy is offensive in the extreme and we cannot trust pre-watershed viewing by ourselves let alone the post watershed period and viewing by our children. It is also a matter of concern that on the one hand political correctness seems to be the order of the day and excessive effort is given to be inclusive of homosexuality, feminism minority lifestyles as normal even though they are minority ways of life. On the other hand traditional marriage, family and christian values are so often denigrated in soaps, chat-shows, comedy and the like implicitly and now more and more explicitly.

Since the BBC has sought to declare itself fair and balanced would it not do well to have a creationist viewpoint by authoritative and competent experts in science and religion to present the alternative views of life to the evolutionists and humanists whose views are promoted as fundamental facts. Without wishing to be cynical, we do wish some attention would be paid to the tablet at Broadcasting House which quotes from the Bible - Philipians 4 v 8.

yours sincerely,
Peter & Esther Isaac.
