Dear Sir

My views on the BBC.

Before the commercial channels had started, the BBC had set the benchmark for all programs to compete with. This as meant that all programs have to be acceptable instead of cheep mindless dross we probably would have got.

This alone is worth the licence fee.

Because of the licence fee the BBC as not had to prostitute there values to obtain money. There for the news and current affairs programs can be accepted as the truth. No other organisation can clam this in this including parliament in this country, maybe the world.

In short: when the BBC tells us the time we believe them,
Pariament or other organisations we check to make shore.

In my view they have served us well, if in ain't broke don't fix it and keep the inter fearing others at arms length.

Yours truly,

F. K. Kent
