

From: kasmander
Sent: 16 December 2003 03:49
To: BBC Charter Review
Subject: Re BBC Charter Review

Dear Sirs:

My input based on the questions asked in the Charter Review Leaflet.

What I value most about the BBC is its fair, balanced coverage of the world. It is objective and nonpartisan and I truly feel that I can trust it.

I feel that the BBC is keeping up very well with changes in the modern world as it is. If it wanted to do an even better job it could higher a horde of twenty-years-olds to run the marketing department.

I do not have access to BBC radio or television. The web site is excellent.

Is there a pressing reason for the BBC to discontinue its commercial services? If not, it should continue them.

The BBC should be funded by the government and its own revenue. As long as its web site remains free I am happy.

I think that as long as the BBD keeps an eye on its reader responses ('fan mail') it will be just fine, Obviously, it should be willing to fire bad reporters or officials, and should be responsive to calls for reform, should they arise.