

RECEIVED 25 MAR 2004

Tessa Jowell, MP
Houses of Parliament
LONDON
SW1

22 March 2004

Dear Ms Jowell

How many more times must dissenters like me have to plead with you to scrap public funding for the BBC ?

Tonight, Rio Ferdinand - banned by the FA for refusing a drug test; having lost an appeal against his punishment - is given a public platform to whinge about his treatment - by the morons that run the BBC.

They have no concern that the attempts to curb the behaviour of so-called soccer "stars" who believe they are beyond reproach is undermined by their actions.

They couldn't care less that the decent people living within this country object to the misuse of our licence fees in this way.

If I break the law because I disagree with their behaviour will they give me airtime to try and enlist public support against the licence fee from my prison cell ? We both know the answer to that one.

Revoke the licence fee. Now. We have multiple choices of TV channel subscription. Nobody would choose to subscribe to an organisation that abuses its privileged position time after time in the promotion of its mistaken identity crisis - i.e. as opposition party, fifth columnist, champion of imaginary injustices and lily-livered bleeding heart treatments for criminals.

Start the process of raising standards in public life. Revoke the Charter now.

Yours sincerely

Terry Lomax

PS I enclose a copy of a recent letter to Question Time. Mr Dimpleby wrote to inform me "I was interested to read the points you make." In his asbestos suit he could care less. I pay his wages. Greg Dyke's golden handshake. All the garbage they spout is funded by me. I want an end to it.

| |
|---|
| Department for Culture, Media and Sport |
| DATE: 23 APR 2004 |
| 07/05/04 ✓ |
| BP |
| 04 00626 |

30 Jan 2004

Dear Mr Dimbleby

On Question Time last night, I watched in disgust as a bunch of ill-mannered, self-satisfied goons harangued Margaret Beckett - the only honest representative, duly elected by the majority - in evidence.

None of them could accept that they might be wrong. None of them could recognise the difference between a genuine government and the corrupt bunch of thieves and shysters which preceded it. The unacceptable face of media presentation.

You asked for suggestions of who should now run the BBC. Only one man would be capable, sadly now deceased.

Never would Joe McCarthy have a more justifiable assignment. The BBC is riven with self-opinionated presenters with bigger egos than the contestants in "I'm a celebrity." Nepotists and family hierarchies like your own. Funny handshakers, shirtlifters, anti-war demonstrators, liars, Muslim activists, Tory sympathisers, paedophiles, nihilists and anarchists.

The mugs in the office who walk out in support of Greg Dyke's "honourable resignation." He just thinks he can make more trouble on the outside. Paxman and his sneering arrogance - Hutton might have cleared you, but I'm far superior to that old duffer. Boris Johnson being given airtime to voice an opinion on genuine people! There's more in the ether than there is between his ears. Hislop - the little boy throwing stink bombs in the classroom. When did he ever tell the truth? Probably not since a prefect held the back of his legs against the fire at some lardy centre of academia.

But do you know the worst part? I voted for Margaret Beckett. Through her office's legislation, I have to pay to keep you. I can change my mind about her and vote for someone else. But I seem to be stuck with you and your comrades.

No more licence fees. That's my new warcry. I hope it's one that's picked up and forces all of you to make an honest living in the real world that us outsiders have to inhabit..

Yours sincerely

Terry Lomax