Dear Mr Stone

BBC Charter Review

Thank you for your response to the BBC Charter Review consultation.

On 11 December 2003 Tessa Jowell launched the BBC Charter review with a wide-ranging industry and public consultation. This consultation is supported by a package of survey research and direct engagement with viewers and listeners.

We intend to publish a Green Paper at the end of this year, which will bring together the results of the consultation and other strands of work to form policy options for further consideration. We are grateful for the comments you have made about the BBC and have fed them into the Charter review process.

Thank you for your interest and contribution to BBC Charter review.

Campaign for Democracy

BBC CHARTER REVIEW.

The BBC makes the highest quality of all programs made on any network. Programs that entertain like the quality Mr Mervyn are as important as those that inform.

The core of the BBC must be to serve the English people in their country England.

The BBC should run their services into other countries where the television is of poor quality, payed for by a fee payed by those in the country who wish to watch the BBC.

The programs no longer shown on the BBC like "Tony Hancock" should be made available on DVD for people to buy.

The BBC must run proper debate programs and not just round bites.

The BBC must uphold free speech, and draw from the widest view. The view of the BHP is not the view of all but they and others still have the right to put their view.

The BBC when buying in programs should buy only high quality programs, the cheap quality american programs should not be bought or copies made of them. The poor quality cartoons should be replaced with the high quality japanese cartoons and quality films from France and other countries.

By moving away from poor quality american programs would improve the corporation in one sweep.

Yours,
C.B.D.

B. Stone
