Dear Sirs,

Having seen your advert in the Daily Telegraph I'm now writing to mention something that has niggled me for a very long time, about the way BBC programmes are presented, which completely spoils my viewing.

It is the fact that hardly a programme is presented these days which isn't accompanied by music of various kinds AND this, plus the loudness of this music makes me want to throw something at the T.V. set, for it always, almost obliterates what is being said. Even the Proms last year suffered from this, at times, when the compere was speaking. I'm not alone in thinking this, I might say,

as most of my friends + acquaintances
complain like me.

Is it possible to do something about it?
I do hope so. Many of us would be exceedingly grateful!!

Yours sincerely.

J. Wheelman (Mus.)
