BBC Charter Review:

Greetings:

First let me thank you for allowing postal opinions, one feels excluded so often because one is not on the internet. The BBC is guilty of this along with so many other organizations that are creating an exclusive Society.

Our main family objection is to the BBC spending licence tax money on things that are not within reporting areas. An example of this is my money going towards £50,000 for a pole with a bird reproduction upon it near Liverpool Cathedral. It seems that the BBC is not content upon reporting news but that it wants to create news. The BBC should be objective not subjective in these areas. How can it try to be impartial if it squanders licence money in this way? Obviously the licence fee is too high and needs to be lowered so that the BBC can once again become an objective reporting agency.

The above is only one example of dishonest squandering of my tax.

Truly,

C. Oley
