

14th March 2005.

Dear Sir,

We gather that you are planning to change BBC to be mainly news, political stuff and "highbrow" type programmes aimed at university educated people - my husband and I are just normal people with just the regular education, and not interested in the fore-mentioned programmes.

We like the occasional documentary but on nature and everyday stuff. We like films, dramas (but not the "high-brow" stuff), programmes like "Flog It" and the house programmes such as "Under the Hammer" and "Trading Up". We also like cookery programmes such as "Saturday Kitchen", and we also like the odd bit of sport - ²⁾ football, boxing, motor racing (not tennis and not rugby). We can take or leave variety shows, but don't really want children's programmes; and we like the occasional gardening programme. We don't mind the odd bit of news; but we like to have plenty of weather forecasts (there aren't enough of those) as my husband works out-doors. We also like "Casualty", "Neighbours" and "Eastenders" so we don't want to lose those.

Yours sincerely
