Dear Sirs/Mesdames,

The BBC Radio and Television Services should always continue to be governed by a Royal Charter. It services everyone from all levels of intellect, ages, for our country, by sport, events, etcetera.

BBC covers and is accepted by our wide spectrum of varied British Society and much admired and respected Worldwide as being the best for its Services for Radio and Television.

We list items for the Charter Review as to be constructive observation and for consideration:-

1. Standards never to be down graded in order to gain popularity or to increase ratings.
2. Programmes to balance and embrace all cultures, religions, and interests.
3. Crude, foul, Offensive Language always to be discouraged.
4. Decorum, essential in all aspects to maintain a standard which at times appears to be declining and accepted of a Yobo Culture.
5. Suitable attire for all programmes and allparticularly for Television.

The BBC has always set a high standard but occasionally appear to now accept lesser standards. These listed items always require constant consideration by all Radio/Television Programme Staff in all departments. Plus, by Artists, Guests, Celebrities, Presenters.

By both Sound and Television programmes the BBC enters all our homes, as if they were invited guests. Therefore, having this priviledge which should never be abused whether intentionally,or, by error.

Recently, we were subjected to a presenter using foul language. By a Programme not by BBC Television. This was focussed on a programme for Children's Welfare needs. This presenter used language that should never be used. This Presenter disgraced not only self but the Profession, especially as children would be watching. Points can always be more forcibly expressed by good sound English, our language is strong and accurate. Offensive language is as much an assault as physical abuse. Good manners, plus good language never fails to bring the right results for any occasion.

The BBC has high standars, hard to match. Only the best is worthy for the name BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION long may this continue by ROYAL CHARTER.

Yours Faithfully,

H. Davies
