

Dear Sir

I always used to think, that the BBC was one of the things you could be proud of if you was British. It set the standard all over the world because it was the best. It was so professional and all the programs ran dead on time

Now very few programs run on time. Now producers do programs that they like and want to see. Not what viewers want to see

The worse programs are some of sport programs, take football. We see surptases, managers and head and shoulders of players as the game is going on. Then we get replays while the game is going on. Who wants to see four replays. If you are going to show a lot of replays then do it at half time or full time. People want to see a football match. We know what managers look like and what the players look like. All we want to see is the game. Also you only want one commentator, but they must be good, on other sports it works alright but not on football. Some times you can not hear the commentator because of the crowd. That never used to happen. why now.

The worse sport that you cover is motor cycling. We want to see some ones front wheel or back wheel. They seem as if its great to put cameras all over the place. Producers are just using gimmicks and couldent care less about the viewer. If you dont put things right soon then the BBC will last long and more people will go to Sky. Eastenders is full of drama and gloom, put a family in like the Trotter in other words put more humour in it. The people are not interested in your new ~~small~~ channels just get your other ones right.

Yours Sincerely
J. King
