

Dear BBC

I have just received your circular from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport regarding the BBC Charter Review public consultation.

With regret I must say that I find this rather ironic in the event of the recent outcry concerning a showing you allowed on your channel the said Jerry Springer the Opera. If a programme receives some 40,000plus complaints and your department then decides to go ahead with such a show then your Charter is a waste of our Licence money.

How on earth can we trust you ever again? It appears that your organisation has sorely forgotten the past culture of this Land: Christianity. A despicable show such as Jerry Springer surely doesn't help the culture of this land. For if that what is associated with Absolute Good can be mocked then what does it say about our society.

In the event of your organisation disregarding unprecedented complaints leads me to conclude that you are totally biased and prejudiced in your showings since it is clear as crystal that none of you in the BBC would have allowed a show to irreverence the Muslim, Hindu, Jewish faith so why allow ours to be held to ridicule? Since you have the cheek to disregard our view shouldn't we have the boldness to disregard our licence fees or at least demand a refund.

Yet since you have shown yourselves to be low and cowardly for that is what I personally think this is: Which is fact since you cannot say that you would allow a show of this nature to mock the other faiths nor are you about to: thus you have shown yourselves for what you are- and your consciences speak against you all.

Stop showing bias against Christianity under the mask of tolerance, freedom of speech and diversity this I find hypocritical. And I find it hard not to label you as HYPOCRITES.

Forgive me for the passionate nature of my letter but I believe the BBC has gone too far in showing this show and be sure for Christ's sake you will receive a backlash sooner or later. Such abuse of Christian's good nature will only be tolerated for so long when Christ moves upon His Church then JUDGEMENT will fall.

We cannot mock God and not reap what we sow the only outcome is lower moral standards which isn't good for the posterity of this country nor is it edifying for your viewers.

Incidentally, I did watch some of the programme but immediately switched it off at the Pope being mocked and I'm a protestant. If you want a warning you only have to look back at that show put out by channel 4 mocking paedophilia. This station in a moral malaise and madness wanted to shock with a taboo that no decent person would venture down.

Thanks for taking the time to read my letter,

MR LEWIS
