

25th March 2005

Dear Sir/Madam

I was pleased to see the advert in yesterday's paper asking for opinions on the BBC.

I have written to the BBC's Complaints Dept. twice with justifying replies. My primary complaint is about trails (advertising). These may be acceptable for unthinking morons who cannot read or decide from reading newspapers or the Radio Times what to see or hear, but I resent having to watch them or, even worse, hear them on the radio, interrupting programmes, realising that they are paid for by the licence fee to keep up the ratings. I do hope the Government's request to cut the advertising will be heeded soon.

My second letter to the BBC related to soundtracks which now often have loud drums and horrible noises which are too powerful and drown the spoken word.

I do hope somebody can do something. You will probably be inundated with letters and e-mails.

Yours sincerely

(Miss) Leonie Neilson
