

Dear Sir or Madam,

I have just read your leaflet Your BBC Your Day and would like to make my comments.

As far as I can say, I agree that it should remain free of any form of control. That is apart from a Viewers Panel to restrain running amok or showing debatable or offensive programmes.

I am deaf, aged 76 but have many interests:- Sport, travel, country life + scenery, different cultures, activities, hobbies, gardening etc. I appreciate you have programmes covering these are well produced and in depth. Taking things in context I feel there are too many programmes are all talk and could as well be moved to radio, as they have nothing to show. Perhaps you could break up the showing of some of the active programmes so that there is something on each evening instead of all talk, making an evening dead as far as I am concerned.

I enjoy Country File and Super League as well as some active programme, but I prefer to be out and about on reasonable days. There are probably many more people who like to be to participate in these things outdoors all days and have something interesting to relax with.

For the same reason, perhaps, sports results could be moved to a later time, that they may play or support their team and still arrive home to see what has happened at other events.

Whilst I appreciate that other channels have poached some of what I consider well made programmes, I have got to say with interruptions they spoil the events at crucial times. As so much money is involved chasing the big events, perhaps you could put a cap on what you are prepared to pay.

I know it may not be the same, but, say if you make things more satisfactory by concentrating more on highlights and playing these at more reasonable times. This could give you a better spread.

Hoping I have been of some help.

Yours faithfully

G. Granville Shaw
