

29-3-2005

I have seen your recent advertisement in the Press asking for views on the BBC and would like to offer the following comments.

There are too many quiz programmes.

Too much sport namely football.

Recently 'Crufts Dog Show' was televised but it is some years since the 'National Cat Show' was broadcast.

This is most unfair as more households in the UK have cats.

Programmes never seem to start on time apart from the News and those stupid dance routines are always shown.

Trailers for future programmes are irritating especially when they are several days in advance. Most people know what programmes are to be shown, even free newspapers have TV listings.

Many programmes cannot be followed up ie websites - not everyone has computer facilities available.

All channels should be available to TV licence payers but this is not possible for people without digital TVs.

Local radio stations contain too many jingles and not enough news content.

I hope you will take ordinary people's views into consideration and not rely on forums and consultants etc when making future policies.

Yours faithfully
A. Wood [Mrs]
