Dear Sir Madam,

I refer to the advertisement in the press re the BBC Charter. I am dismayed at the lowering of standards now in place, particularly with the use of bad language & sexual content of many programmes, even before the watershed. I am the proud father of grand parents to two little girls and I despair of the rubbish that is now put on and from which I shall have to shield them as they grow. It is not fair to parents to the young with such a diet of poor reality shows which only seem to focus on the lowest in our society - why don't you make and show programmes about decent ordinary people going about their business instead of the infatuated and self obsessed who clamour to have been five minutes of fun.

Why do you get a good idea — the Test the Nahaï and Sticky Cane dancing — then frog it to death with sprinkled staws — who is really interested in a Test the Nahaï based a TV programme, it's hardly Eastern is it. Nor is a Sticky Cane dancing type programme a various profession's pastime etc etc — don't you realise that it's time to call it aday on this type of programme and bring back some decent family entertainment that we dare watch with the family — that used to be what the BBC was renowned for, sadly not any longer and the irony is that it's costing us time to watch such rubbish.

yours sincerely

J. Wragg (R)
