

21st. March, 2006.

1/2006 B.B.C.,

I begin by expressing my thanks for some wonderful programmes and entertainment: particularly, the classic serial dramas, and news and current events presentations.

I cannot recall the exact words of your Charter, but 'to inform' comes to mind.

Please may we have short informative films on the lines of: not parking on pavements (detrimental to the blind and infirm) not throwing litter, not defacing buildings with graffiti, men walking on the outside of pavements. etc.

I am fond of birds and animals. May we have short films in summer to ensure that owners are aware that their pets need space, air, food and water — and in the winter, warmth, and food for the birds

I listen to non-medical friends criticising (always!) their doctors, nurses and treatment. What about presenting basic anatomy, physiology, and basic response to illness.

Incidentally, certain presenters, and Mrs. Emily Thaitis springs to mind, appear to delight in running down the medical profession.

Finally, everyone, but EVERYONE, dislikes explicit sex scenes.

Actually, that was not 'finally' — I loved 'A Day in Hyde Park' some years ago — BBC 2. More films like that please.

Use my remarks, if you wish, but not my name or address.
Yours, sincerely,
