

DFID

Department for International Development

The Department for International Development, DFID, is the part of the UK Government that manages Britain's aid to poor countries. The DFID supports long-term programmes to help bring people out of poverty.

As most of DFID's work takes place overseas, people in this country are not always aware of the many important projects the organisation is involved in. Look at the work of the DFID to find out:

What does DFID do? _____

How many people does DFID help to lift out of poverty every year?

When DFID doesn't give money straight to developing countries, who does it give money to? _____

How does DFID respond to disasters such as earthquakes and floods?

How does DFID work with charities? _____

How does DFID make sure aid is used for its intended purpose?

Find an example, or a case study, of DFID's work to improve education in developing countries. _____

Find an example, or a case study, of DFID's work to improve peoples health in developing countries. _____
