

Employment Relations Research Series No.15

Awareness, knowledge and exercise of individual employment rights

Nigel Meager, Claire Tyers, Sarah Perryman,
Jo Rick and Rebecca Willison

The views expressed in this report are the authors' and do not necessarily reflect those of the Department of Trade and Industry.

© Crown Copyright 2002

Foreword

Promoting good employment relations is an important task of government. Our role in the Department of Trade and Industry is to encourage the development of a skilled and flexible labour market founded on the principle of partnership at work.

The Department commissions an ongoing programme of evaluation and research in employment relations. In-house researchers, economists and policy advisors devise research projects to be conducted on our behalf by external researchers, who are chosen through a competitive tendering process. Projects typically look at areas where we are interested in identifying good practice, in assessing the impact of particular policies or regulations, or examining emergent trends. Details of the programme appear regularly in Labour Market Trends and can be found at <http://www.dti.gov.uk/er/emar>.

The Research Series is where we disseminate the results of this work. The views expressed in these publications do not necessarily reflect those of the Department. We publish these reports as a contribution towards an open debate about how we might best achieve our overall aim of improving competitiveness.

Mark Beatson

Director, Employment Market Analysis and Research Branch

The Institute for Employment Studies

The Institute for Employment Studies is an independent, apolitical, international centre of research and consultancy in human resource issues. It works closely with employers in the manufacturing, service and public sectors, government departments, agencies, professional and employee bodies, and foundations. For over 30 years the Institute has been a focus of knowledge and practical experience in employment and training policy, the operation of labour markets and human resource planning and development. IES is a not-for-profit organisation which has a multidisciplinary staff of over 50. IES expertise is available to all organisations through research, consultancy, publications and the Internet.

IES aims to help bring about sustainable improvements in employment policy and human resource management. IES achieves this by increasing the understanding and improving the practice of key decision makers in policy bodies and employing organisations.

Acknowledgements

The study was conducted on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) by the Institute for Employment Studies in partnership with NOP, who undertook the fieldwork. The authors are grateful to Stephen Penlington, who managed the project on behalf of DTI, for his support and encouragement during the research, and to Carol Goldstone at NOP who supervised the fieldwork. Last, but by no means least, we are grateful to those members of the general public who gave their time to participate in the telephone survey.