

Dear Mr. Gowers,

It was with great trepidation that I read of plans afoot to further extend the present music copyright law - from 50 to 95 years.

As one of many thousands who does not care about pop music and depend largely on re-issue of vintage material made available to us by the small record companies, I feel that it would be a national disaster if the laws were allowed to be changed.

I feel very strongly in protesting because these rich and greedy Pop stars and the large Record companies are only looking to make even more money from an ever-expanding and an over-powering Pop music business. We, the older generation will really loose out of the wonderful music from the past 50 years.

We therefore appeal to you and the British Parliament in thwarting any moves to extend the present copyright laws.

Thank you!

Yours sincerely

Leonard Nicholson (mr).
