The Plant Health (England) Order 2005 and the Plant Health (Forestry) (Great Britain) Order 2005 impose restrictions on the import of trees, plants and plant produce and products, including non-manufactured articles of wood, into England in order to safeguard plant health. Similar legislation applies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Broadly speaking material falls into one of the following categories, according to the risk of introduction of pests and diseases:

- Unrestricted: Present little or no risk and are not subject to plant health controls. Includes nearly all flower seeds, some cut flowers and most vegetables for eating (except potatoes).
- Controlled: Normally require a phytosanitary certificate issued by the plant protection service of the exporting country. Includes those rooted plants that are not prohibited, trees without roots (e.g. Christmas trees) most fruits, tomato and sunflower seeds and some cut flowers.
- Prohibited: Pose such a serious risk that import only permitted under authority of a licence issued by Defra or the Forestry Commissioners. Includes many species of rooted plants and trees from outside Europe.

Baggage concession (Not applicable to postal imports)

Small quantities of controlled material may be imported without phytosanitary certificates providing they are:

- in personal baggage,
- intended for household use and not intended for use in the course of trade or business,
- free from signs of pests and diseases.

Providing these conditions are satisfied controlled plants and/or plant products and/or produce may be imported without a phytosanitary certificate by each traveller up to the limits set out below:
