

Part 2

Concessionary Bus Fares Data in England

Data on concessionary fares were collected in a survey of local authorities conducted over the same period as the PSV Operator Finance Survey. Data are presented here for December 2005 and June 2006. This illustrates the changes that came with the introduction of free off-peak travel for over-60s in April 2006.

Key results

- In December 2005, 42 authorities provided free bus travel for the elderly. Of these, 11 placed peak-time restrictions on travel (Table 6), while the remainder allowed over-60s to travel for free at any time.
- Although the statutory scheme introduced in April 2006 only obliges local authorities to provide free travel off-peak, 114 authorities allowed unrestricted travel to over-60s in June 2006 (Table 6).
- In June 2006, 36 local authorities operated a smartcard scheme of bus passes. A smartcard, as defined in the survey, is a permit with a chip which can read and store travel data. The vast majority of the remainder operated a simple photocard scheme (Table 6)
- In June 2006, 168 local authorities offered enhanced schemes, or alternatives to the bus pass. Enhanced schemes available included (for a fee) the removal of peak-time restrictions from the concessionary scheme. Sometimes discounts were made available on Senior Citizens railcards. Alternatives offered often took the form of travel tokens for use on taxis, or use of particular rail routes.

Background

Concessionary fare reimbursement should be seen as a subsidy to the passenger rather than the operator. Local authorities and Passenger Transport Authorities reimburse operators for net revenue lost as a result of their participation in the schemes, taking into account income and expenditure from the extra travel generated.

The Transport Act 2000 introduced a statutory minimum half fare scheme for local bus travel for older people. It was implemented in June 2001. The age of eligibility for concessionary travel was equalised for men and women from 1 April 2003, at age 60. This equality applies to any concessionary fare scheme which is available in the area where the permit holder is resident. The Travel Concessions (Extension of Entitlement (England) Order 2005 further extended this scheme to entitle all those aged 60 or over to free bus travel at off-peak times. It was implemented on 1 April 2006.

In some areas local authorities also offer enhanced schemes which may lift the time restrictions or provide concessionary travel into an adjacent local authority area, for example county-wide schemes and, in a few areas, travel in adjacent unitary authorities.

Data for the schemes offered by local authorities shown in the following tables are from DfT's occasional surveys of local authorities. Surveys of local authorities and Passenger Transport Authorities were carried out in 1992, 1997, 2003 and 2006. The surveys ask for details of each scheme that allows older people to travel at a discount fare on buses, and, in some areas, other public transport including light rail or ferries. Senior Railcard discounts are often available, either in addition, or as an alternative to the local bus concessionary fare scheme.
