I understand you are holding a consultation on MPs pay and conditions.

I would like to offer the following suggestion: That we randomly select a jury of electors to review the pay and conditions and allow them to set the level and rules by which MPs operate. Not only will this allow far more flexibility in the approach, but, because the jury would consist of ordinary people, the public are extremely likely to accept their conclusion as being "what a panel with me personally on would have decided".

Personally, I think such a jury would be able to hugely increase MPs pay, and e.g. allow spouses to work in offices, because such criticism usually is stoked up by the media, and I'm sure if ordinary people were presented with all the facts then they would dismiss the media hysteria and accept sensible proposals.
