This policy was screened for impact on equalities on 13th March 2007. The following evidence has been considered, the power under the fees clause of the Borders Bill 2007 does not, as a result of its implementation impose any changes to the charging process. Hence, the implementation of the clause will not impact on any particular group. Any impact will only occur and can only be assessed when subsequent regulations containing specific fee levels are proposed under the charging powers. We are committed to conducting appropriate impact assessments of the fee levels at that time. As an indication of this commitment, the current fee proposals for work permits have been accompanied by a full Regulatory Impact Assessment, this has been published on 15th March and copies can be obtained from the IND website (www.ind.homeoffice.gov.uk) and libraries of both Houses. As a result of this screening, it has been decided that a full equality impact assessment is not required.
