5. Learner Destinations

5.1. The LSC is currently working with the key partners to explore the feasibility of a measure of appropriate learner destinations through the collection of robust information.

5.2. The learner destination measure aims to improve understanding among key partners, education and training providers and other stakeholders, of the impact of different learning routes on individuals’ employability, career paths and rates of promotion through learner destinations information. It will also enable learners to make informed decisions about the most appropriate learning route to achieving their career goals.

5.3. An initial feasibility study has been conducted to identify what data is needed and the most effective way of collecting it in order to reduce duplication and bureaucracy. It is envisaged that additional feasibility work will be required during 2006/07, with the measure being rolled out from September 2008.

5.4. Learner destinations and the Framework for Excellence

5.4.1. Following the development of a provider level measure of learner destinations, information generated from the use of the measure will contribute to the responsiveness to learners’ key performance indicator within the framework for excellence.
